The popcorn popped, guests came dressed to impress and the red carpet was rolled out.

The Treasure State serves as the backdrop for the feature film "A Fork in the Road" which pulled out all the stops for its premiere at the Mynra Loy center in Helena.

A studio film on an independent budget the film was written and designed for Montana.

The film's Writer and Co-Producer, Alan Di Fiore says "Every time you turn the camera you've got a million dollar shot on your hands...we were working with a small budget and the backdrop makes it look like a 100 million dollar film, that's one of the best things about Montana"

"Montana offers a lot on screen that you can't find anywhere else and I think that's why we chose to focus the movie here," says the films Writer, Producer and Director, Jim Kouf.

The movie was filmed in the fall of 2007 and features the backdrops of laurel, Livingston, Paradise Valley, Bozeman and Three Forks. Staring Josh Cooke, Jaime King and Missi Pyle, the film follows the character Will Carson on the run from a crime he didn't commit.

The film's Executive Producer Clark Bartkowski says "all the actors told me when making this film, gosh they don't make movies like this anymore. Instead of those crazy action films where you've got machine guns strapped to the guy's legs and bombs going off this is more real, people can really relate to this movie and what the two characters are going through and I think people will put themselves in the film and see what they would do if they were in those circumstances so I think that's what makes it so special"

The film promises some big laughs and some big action-packed surprises. Hollywood magic was definitely in the air and everyone was excited to see the big sky on the big screen.
